Etudes For Papa 老爸練習曲

Through delicate ink sketches, this book captures the anxieties and unexpected joys of fatherhood. It reflects on how men often learn to be fathers only after becoming one, and how we, as sons, might have overlooked our fathers' presence. As we raise our own children, we find ourselves echoing our fathers' words, realizing their lasting impact. While the world changes and their methods may seem outdated, the journey of fatherhood is one we must navigate with our own wisdom.

The Window 窗

A graphic novel without words. In a small European town, a tender romance blossoms between a delivery boy and a girl with a limp. The girl, who observes the town's daily life from her window, is captivated by the world outside. In a gesture of kindness and affection, the delivery boy modifies his bicycle to take her on adventures. As they ride together, she discovers life beyond her window. But this joy is shattered when war arrives, and everything is lost.

80s Diary in Taiwan 1-2 80年代事件簿 1-2

Sean Chuang is a well-known director of commercials, but also a comic artist. '80s Diary in Taiwan is his third book in compilation of stories, where he continues to tell stories with images. As a continuation of the first installment in the sophisticated narrative and prose style, the book records the splendid times in 1980s, a period of time very important to him and to those people who lived in Taiwan. He sorts out things that belong to this generation that shares common lives and cultural memories.

Local Heroes 1-3 潮浪群雄 1-3

In an era of national stability but intellectual repression, a group of dreamers faced challenges and setbacks, all the while hoping for a glimmer of light after a long period of darkness. One day in 1980, Wu Nien-jen, who was working at a municipal sanatorium, received a call from the "Central Motion Picture Corporation" (CMPC). Shortly thereafter, the 28-year-old Wu joined CMPC. Similarly, in 1979, Hsiao Yeh, who had returned to Taiwan after a year of interrupted studies, sought out CMPC to settle unpaid fees. Soon, the 29-year-old Hsiao Yeh also joined CMPC, becoming Wu's colleague. How could these two young men, both idealists with a passion for Taiwan and cinema, bring about change within this conservative and rigid system?

After Wu Nien-jen and Hsiao Yeh joined CMPC, they faced numerous rejections. However, they finally saw a glimmer of hope with "The Sandwich Man." Yet, the path for New Wave Cinema was far from smooth. Several films in a row suffered dismal box office performances, and institutions like the Government Information Office frequently intervened. In 1989, "A City of Sadness" participated in the Venice Film Festival and astonishingly won the Golden Lion, catapulting Taiwanese cinema into international fame.

Son of Formosa 1 來自清水的孩子 1

In the 1930s, under Japanese rule in Shimizu, Kunlin grew up surrounded by nursery rhymes and picture books. As war drew near, with parades, air raids, and conscription, no one could remain unaffected. After the war ended, he thought he had finally reached a stable life. However, an even greater darkness awaited him...

Passing 夢魂之地【平路台灣三部曲·三】

Passing is not only about Taiwan's political history but also a novel about the plight of people without a home to return to. It is written for all children who, like the author, struggle to establish their own identities and communicate with their fathers. The book intricately and powerfully depicts the post-war descendants from different social backgrounds who, amidst the intertwining of grand and small historical narratives, strive to understand the struggles and entanglements acknowledged by their predecessors. The novel captures the politics of blood and tears, father-son conflicts, a life of self-torment, and the tumult of the era emerging from cracks in the narrative.

Mountain Talk / Shandihua 山地話 / 珊蒂化

Hailing from the Pinuyumayan people of Chishang, Taitung, up-and-coming aboriginal author Yi-Hang Ma begins a journey of family reunions and separations, departure, and literacy. The homophone Mountain Talk is a “politically incorrect” word heavily saturated with inquiries of identity, space, households, and writing, yet Shandihua questions with a feminine voice, “Where is this label attached? What is hidden beneath?” And the loss of intimate dialogues of love, of lingering, of turmoil. Fettered by identity or gender, whether vibrant or sorrowful, witness Yi-Hang Ma turn the stories of aboriginals, boys, women, and gays into their true voices, allowing their vividness to radiate forth with the force of a canon.

Joanne Deng
鄧九雲

Joanne Deng is a Taiwanese writer, actor, playwright and director. Her works shed light on the female experience, focusing on the identity, emotional narrative and vulnerability of the urbanite. In 2015, Deng created "Novel on Stage," a regular performance reading, often held at atypical venues, of her short stories after publishing. She specializes in the use of theatre elements, mostly monologues, to re-establish the relationship between the text and the reader's gaze, and to explore the limitations and possibilities of narrative in both literature and theatre. Her most recent focus is on "the truth and fiction of a novel," where she poses the question, "How important is a True Story to the reader?"

Before We Were Monsters
成為怪物以前

Eve is a young and quiet crime scene cleaner. A former "super smeller", she lost her sense of smell after a tragic incident, only to have it come alive at scenes of death and decomposition. One night, she is tasked to cleaning up a suicide, not knowing it was a murder scene. With all trace evidence gone, she becomes the police's top suspect. Evoking the best of Patrick Suskind, Thomas Harris, and Mariana Enriquez, this is a dark, searing, astonishingly confident debut that announces the arrival of a major crime writer.

In Between

The Ongoing Journey of Taiwan's Storytelling

The "In Between" selection reflects the intricate interplay of identities and narratives at the heart of Taiwan's literary and cultural landscape. From children's books and comics to fiction and non-fiction, this collection highlights works that explore the intersections of identity, race, gender, generation, and tradition versus modernity. These works capture Taiwan's ongoing journey in its search for cultural and political identity. Through these stories, the Taiwan Pavilion presents a unique opportunity for international publishers to gain profound insights into the complexities of Taiwan's evolving history, values, and the multifaceted voices that shape its contemporary society.

Gaea Books, Co., Ltd.

蓋亞文化有限公司

Founded in 2001, Gaea Books is a Taiwanese publisher, and a kingdom of memories and imagination. We devote ourselves to scouting gifted authors in Taiwan, Hong Kong, and Mainland China. In the meantime, we introduce the popular works from Europe, USA, Japan, and South Korea to readers in Taiwan. In 2009, Gaea Books started a new brand, Dyna Books, to publish graphic novels and comics, and to find a different way to tell stories - through visual arts.
